Question 1

Fill in the blank

I'm a designer and an educator. I'm a multitasking (1) _ , and I push my students to fly through a very creative, multitasking (2) _ process. But how efficient is, really, this multitasking?

Let's consider for a while the (3) _ of multitasking. A couple of examples. Look at that. This is my multitasking activity result. So trying to cook, answering the phone, writing SMS, and maybe uploading some pictures about this awesome barbecue.

So someone tells us the story about (4) _ , so this two percent of people who are able to control multitasking (5) _ . But what about ourselves, and what about our reality? When's the last time you really enjoyed just the voice of your friend? So this is a project I'm working on, and this is a series of front covers to (6) _ our super, hyper — (7) _ phones into the essence of their function.

Another example: Have you ever been to Venice? How beautiful it is to lose ourselves in these little streets on the island. But our multitasking reality is pretty different, and full of tons of information. So what about something like that to (8) _ our sense of adventure?

I know that it could sound pretty (9) _ to speak about mono when the number of possibilities is so huge, but I push you to consider the option of focusing on just one task, or maybe turning your digital senses totally off. So nowadays, everyone could produce his (10) _ . Why not? So find your monotask spot within the multitasking world.

Thank you.

I'm a designer and an educator. I'm a multitasking (1) person , and I push my students to fly through a very creative, multitasking (2) design process. But how efficient is, really, this multitasking?

Let's consider for a while the (3) option of multitasking. A couple of examples. Look at that. This is my multitasking activity result. So trying to cook, answering the phone, writing SMS, and maybe uploading some pictures about this awesome barbecue.

So someone tells us the story about (4) supertaskers , so this two percent of people who are able to control multitasking (5) environment . But what about ourselves, and what about our reality? When's the last time you really enjoyed just the voice of your friend? So this is a project I'm working on, and this is a series of front covers to (6) downgrade our super, hyper — (7) mobile phones into the essence of their function.

Another example: Have you ever been to Venice? How beautiful it is to lose ourselves in these little streets on the island. But our multitasking reality is pretty different, and full of tons of information. So what about something like that to (8) rediscover our sense of adventure?

I know that it could sound pretty (9) weird to speak about mono when the number of possibilities is so huge, but I push you to consider the option of focusing on just one task, or maybe turning your digital senses totally off. So nowadays, everyone could produce his (10) mono product . Why not? So find your monotask spot within the multitasking world.

Thank you.
